

Marquis T. Wilson

October 8, 1992 - April 28, 2019

Marquis Terrell Wilson was born on October 8, 1992 in Baltimore, Maryland to the late Darren Wilson and Portia Johnson. He departed this life on April 28, 2019.

At a very young age, Marquis was adopted and raised by his grandmother, the late Mary Isabel Wilson. She loved him unconditionally. He loved and adored her with all his heart.

After the unexpected death of his father and grandmother, many of his family members and friends stepped up to ensure Marquis never felt alone. His cousins, Jerome Selby and Tavon Brown served as mentors and father figures in his life. He held them in the highest regard and called upon them often when he needed guidance and support.

“Mardy” as he was affectionately called, received his early education through the Baltimore City School System, attending KIPP Academy before completing his secondary education at Baltimore Polytechnic Institute. To further his learning, Marquis attended Virginia Union University before transferring and graduating from University of Maryland, Baltimore County. While many are satisfied with a bachelor’s degree, Marquis’ determination and motivation for success led him to pursue his graduate degree in social work from Morgan State University, graduating in May of 2016. One of the accomplishments he was most proud of was passing the state exam to gain his credentials as a licensed clinical social worker.

While Marquis worked a plethora of jobs, his true passion lied in helping others. Marquis served as a Social Worker with the Department of Social Services before transitioning into his role as Program Director at Kings Health Systems. Even though he was one of the youngest in his field, he proved to be a true catalyst for change. His leadership, dedication, and overall work ethic was admired and respected by his coworkers and clients. Marquis was known for his hustle and love for success. He worked many part-time jobs counseling and helping others by performing home visits to many clients, who never hesitated to contact him in their time of need.

Marquis was known for his smart mouth and witty comebacks as well as his laid-back personality. During the day he was dedicated to his work but after work hours, Marquis never hesitated to “turn up”. His laugh made a lasting impression on those who were fortunate enough to meet him and his energy would light up a room.

He is preceded in death by his father, Darren Wilson, grandmother’s, Mary Isabel Wilson and Mattie Stevenson, grandfather, Charles Johnson, and uncle, Steven Burrell.

Marquis leaves to cherish his memory: mother, Portia Johnson; sisters, Jessica Thomas and Ashley Lane; brother, D’Angelo Preston; five nephews Jonah and Bryan Wilkes-Barnes, Brycen Culmer, Khylin Preston and Kenneth Lambert III; aunts Kim and Karen Burrell; uncles, Gordan Burrell and David Johnson; great aunt, Bernadette Gross; cousins who were also sisters, Bria Selby and Briana Moseley; devoted best friend, Keaunte’ Johnson, his beloved dog, Charley; and a host of other beloved family, close friends, and colleagues who will all miss him dearly.

“ I spoke at your funeral and just like now I was so in shock I couldn't form the words. I know you was like a red girl sit down. Lmaooo, it was always big jokes. Thank you for being a great friend. Listening, showing up, encouraging me, advice, the fun times, road trips, date nights, all of the good things. We were friends, roommates, business partners, co workers. Once you became a social worker I (we) got you a job as my supervisor. Ive seen you advocate and come up with innovative ways to really change peoples lives for the better. I will always love you and carry you where ever I go...whatever I do.
