“ This journey have been a tough one. My Dad went to glory on August 1, 2007 and I have been dealing with the lost as can be expected. This year I just could not get it together. I was so so emotional. Many times you here someone say, he is in a better place, he is no longer in pain, etc. My selfish place make me say being here with his family is the best place. When I asked God for this man, I can truely say he will give you the desires of your heart. He meet and exceeded what a real father , real man is. I can say , I would have shared him with anyone that was not afforded the opportunity to have such a gem. God bless AND he will always remain in my heart (irreplaceable)

“ I spent all day yesterday thinking about how wonderful it would have been to spend time with my Dad. I can see his smile, hear his hum, hear him asking me to get something for him, oh how it would be my pleasure to be able to bring him a glass of water. If only, I had another opportunity to plan an outing for dinner. I miss the opportunity of anticipating his needs. This man brought so much joy and happiness into my life, that my life would never be the same without him. I know one day we will meet again, and he will say, “I knew we would be together as a family again. I love you Daddy always##imported-begin##Little La Vita##imported-end##
