“ I was almost 9 years old when my mother came home from the hospital with George. So, I was old enough to remember him as a baby. I included a picture of me feeding him a bottle.

From that day to his last day, George traveled a complicated path. I would often say that he was “stuck in the 70s”. He loved the music and all that was a part of the 1970s, down to the “lamb chop” sideburns.

If I had to name one thing that I admired most about George, it was that he always seemed to enjoy the “successes” of his brothers and sisters and was happy for them. He always seemed to have a joyful spirit.

George’s life wasn’t always easy, but he never let it get him down.

I love you, my brother.

Rest in peace, George.
