

Marva V. Myles

May 16, 1948 - November 9, 2003

Marva Vernice Myles, daughter of Jessie and William Brinkley, was born on May 16, 1948 in Baltimore, Maryland. She went home to be with the Lord on November 9, 2003 after a long battle with cancer. She received her education from Dunbar High School in Baltimore and furthered her education by graduating from Cortez Peters Business School. Upon completion of her education she worked at Baltimore Gas and Electric Company as a cash clerk for 23 years. Later on in life, after an early retirement from BG&E, she returned to Morgan State College to attend computer education classes. With her new knowledge of computers, she decided to go back to work and in August of 1998, she began working for the State of Maryland (Parole and Probation Department) as an intake coordinator. She was also a life long member of Israel Baptist Church. On May 18, 1968, she married her high school sweetheart, Curtis L. Myles Sr. From this union two children were born, Curtis Jr. and Kristen Bacon. Marva was a very special lady, making friends wherever she went. She was a devoted wife and mother and would give her own life for her family. She treasured her relationships with family and friends. She loved to entertain company and almost always had a great meal waiting for anyone who decided to visit. She was understanding, charismatic, opinionated, funny, feisty and an all around lovely person to be around. She will be sorely missed by all. She leaves to mourn: her husband, Curtis L. Myles; one son, Curtis Aaron Myles; one daughter, Kristen Lanae Bacon; one sister, Dorothy Ann; five brothers, Van, Bernard, John Jr., George and Reginald; a daughter-in-law, Danielle; a son-in-law, Anthony; an unborn grandchild, Zaire; nieces, nephews and a host of other relatives and friends.

“The Chinese typically fare better emotionally than people in the U.S. when facing the loss of a loved one, in part because of ingrained cultural attitudes that minimize the expression of negative emotions, but also because of rituals that emphasize a continuing bond with lost loved ones. This is the key finding in a study that compared grief processing and grief avoidance of bereaved spouses and parents in the U.S. and China. “In this world nothing is certain but death and taxes,” Benjamin Franklin once said. Yet, how we deal with those certainties is a different story. George Bonanno, Associate Professor of Psychology and Education, has spent his career exploring emotional responses to tragedy—from bereavement in response to the death of a close family member to resilience in a traumatic situation. His new study is reported in a recent article in The Journal of Consulting and Clinical Psychology. “Traditionally, Chinese people focus less attention on the experience or expression of emotion,” Bonanno explained, citing studies that say that in China it is shameful to oneself and one’s family to express intensely negative or disturbing emotions. The Chinese also have specific mourning rituals that prohibit any excessive expression of grief. “The belief is that your ancestors are somewhere else and you still have a relationship with them,” Bonanno says. Mourning practices are more about honoring and bringing comfort to the deceased and helping them transition to the spirit realm. “They can still influence your life,” he adds. So it is important to remain in good standing with the dead by making offerings to them in exchange for favors they might do for those still living. The focus of the death rituals in China has nothing to do with feelings. Bonanno’s previous work revealed that the more Westerners think about the loss and process it, the worse they adjust to it, because the focus of grief in Western countries is mainly on accepting the finality of death and overcoming the emotional pain of attachment to the person who is gone. In the West, Bonanno explained, grief involves breaking the bond with the loved one. His research also shows that, in the U.S., if the bond is maintained, the surviving relative is worse off. Not so in China. In fact those who had lost a loved one in China showed rapid recovery though initially they were extremely distressed. “Everyone feels pain after losing a loved one, but for the Chinese, processing the loss was not about a psychological experience,” Bonanno said. “They may feel bad, but they are doing it out of obligation. They feel bad, but they get over it more quickly than Americans.” Initial death rituals in China are designed to “send the deceased successfully to the land of the dead,” Bonanno said. And since they are going to a place where dead people “live,” they will need accoutrements to sustain them. Mourners present “gifts” at the funeral in the form of paper objects—passports, currency, cars, companions, houses, food—that are burned ceremoniously to be sent to the deceased. This process is ongoing because the bond with the deceased is maintained. In China, people will go to a temple to honor deceased ancestors by burning objects they think they need to provide them with ongoing assistance. Bonanno believes that their quick recovery can perhaps be attributed to the clear and possibly comforting guidelines for expressing grief and for not expressing it. It could also be that the more communal aspect of Chinese rituals offer support from the community and that grief processing is not experienced as an individual endeavor as much as it is in the West. “We might deal with loss better [in the West] if we thought about it differently,” Bonanno says. “We worship independence and earning capability, and we are at a loss when natural events happen.” When we lose someone we are deeply attached to, there are questions without clear answers. Where did the person go? Do they exist somewhere else? “Those are enormous questions that we don’t have any vehicl

“ My deepest sympathy during your time of sorrow but know that the God of comfort is with you all during this time of tribulation. (2Corinthian 1:3-4) Due to the many unforeseen occurrences that brings tragedy to our lives Jehovah God promises one day soon Death will be no more (Rev 21:3-4) and his son have been given the authority to bring all those in the memorial tombs back to life. John 5:28-29 Just think there will come a time not only will death be no more but Jehovah promises that no one will have to say I'm sick according to Isaiah 33:24. I feel the need to express these words of hope because so many of us today treasure the gift of life and we do all we can to maintain it to hold on to it. That is why it hurts so badly when our loved ones die. With so many of us desiring life today no matter how good or bad it is we still want life here on earth. No one looks forward to that time of death. That is why I am under obligation by the spirit and love of God to share that hope that is in our near future that the righteous shall inherit the earth and reside upon it forever according to Psalms 37: 29 along with the above stated promises on a paradise and peaceful earth. We all can hold true to this everlasting promise because Isaiah 55:11 states all the words Jehovah have spoken WILL NOT RETURN WITHOUT RESULTS. What a wonderful prospect for our future especially enlight of the fact that Hebrews 6:18 States of God, it is IMPOSSIBLE for him to lie.##imported-begin##Carter##imported-end##

You know if you were here we would be setting up a big party for you. I know it can't compare to the one you are having in heaven. Aunt Boodie, Mom and Dad, your cousins and everyone else is there and I know yall are sitting around talking about the good old days. You know when I went to the gravesite by myself last week, it was a little tough. I knew you were smiling at me. It took me a long time to get out there, because I didn't know if I could get back. It was ok, I cried and cried and cried and talked to you for awhile, but afterwards I felt better. So the next day on Mother's Day, it wasn't bad at all. I brought Danni, Anthony, Kris(your baby) and little Zaire. Mom believe me if you were here you would truly adore him. He is truly a blessing. He is always so happy. So anyway I hope you have a great day and we all miss you terribly. So party on today, but not to much, because you know Mom and Dad are there. “ Hey mom, Zaire just turned one on Dec 3, we had his party on the 4th. It was a bitter sweet event. Right in the mix of cooking the food I got really down and started to cry right in the middle of the kitchen floor. I miss you so much, it's so much that I want to tell you and share with you. I get so annoyed sometimes when I hear my friends talk bad about there mother when I just wish I could have my mother here with me. I just tell them to be thankful that they still have their mother. So Zaire is getting so very big and we found out that the next baby, due in April, is a boy. Looks like we are just gonna have to adopt a girl, I think Bacon only makes boys..hahahah. It was a ton of kids at the party and I almost lost it a couple of times, it was fun though. Zaire just smashed his cake all over his face, cake was everywhere. Anyway, I'm always thinking of you and I wish you were here. Love you. Love, Kris, Bacon, Zaire and Isaiah###imported-begin###Kristen###imported-end###

This how my brother and I deal with the lost of our mother that is still all to new to us. Please stay off my mother's guest book and have some respect for us even if you don't respect yourself or your mother. The Devil Is Alive and well, the previous email is evidence of that.##imported-begin##Kristen##imported-end##

“ Hey lady. There is a lot going on now. As you know I am pregnant again with our 3rd, can you believe it. Zaire is 2, Isaiah is 1 and I'm 5 months preg. It was really great visiting with you on mother's day. I was just thinking if you were still here, you and dad would have been married for 38 years, gee weez. I plan to make it that long. Zaire is doing great in school and I'm the PTA president. Ha, funny I know. I find out this thursday what we are having, I hope it's a girl, of course you know already. I miss you and wish I could call you for advice on somethings. I'm doing the best I know how in raising the boys. I miss you mommy. Love Kris##imported-begin##Kristen##imported-end##
