“ I met Mrs. Winborne when she temporarily managed the Petworth library in Washington, DC. I later worked under her at the Benning Interim Library that year and then for just over ten months at the Lamond-Riggs Neighborhood Library. She was a very fair-minded manager. I also remember hearing how, as a working mother and grandmother herself, she understood the needs of some employees confronting the work-life balance. Mrs. Winborne was quite willing to share how the DC Public Library system operated. I also remember hearing how she enjoyed volunteering in her local school after leaving the library system. She was one of the many people in the library system who serve people and who make more of an impact on people's lives than is often recognized by the community.
